Takeaway Learnings

- Learning stages connect with the development of the brain. A school-like formal institution will measure milestones of lives.
- Preliminary scouting of knowing and understanding your child will base your search. Ask yourself: Do I know and recognize my child? What is the best fit for my child's needs?
- The priority of factors differs from families and children. As a parent, your homework must study the school's authenticity, assessment procedures, safety, proximity, board, and the ability to help children build a vision for themselves.
- Getting your child in a school that understands the art and science of grooming lives is the key. It all begins from within- interacting with your child will direct your decision to choose the right school.
- Boards are all about the WHW; What are the concepts covered, How are they taught, and Whether the child is assessed.
- It's easier for new-age parents to choose as lines of board differences merge with the new NEP. The strength of the international board is its flexibility, soon coming up in Indian boards.
- Go for institutions that blend traditional and new-age methodologies and learning offer flexibility.
- Comparing cost with quality of education will have dire consequences.
- Good educational training will thrive to holistically develop a child to become a socio-economically independent member.
- Find out from your colleagues or directly with the students and parents associated with the school. Are all the factors in sync with the mission and vision of the school?
- Checking the institute's social media activities tells a lot about the management.
