Introduction

Replacing the 34-year-old education system is no mean feat. The New Education Policy announced last year amidst a global pandemic had the country debating on the possibility of such a climatic shift. With nail-biting students worried about their education and educators adapting to the learn-from-home change, the time has come to step toward Universal Education. But now, what will the education system look like in 2021?

Join us in this relevatory session with Ms. Sasmita Mohanty- Director & Principal of Sanjay Ghodawat International School, Kolhapur and Mr. Pramod Tripathi- Headmaster of Ashoka Universal School on the 21st of January at 5.00 pm.

Takeaway Learnings

- Teachers are the fore-front warriors of the education system during the pandemic.
- Adapt and evolve has become the mantra of the covid era. Teachers and educators have had to self-train and practice through trial and error with the resources they had.
- Digital platforms are here to stay and enrichen the learning experience of all stakeholders in the learning process.
- The more you share, the more you learn and evolve as an educator.
- Instructors need to accept accountability and responsibility for their role in the education pedagogy.
- More than reskilling, 2021 is all about changing mindsets.
- Educators need to conducting sessions for all parties, i.e, parents, students, and faculties, to sensitize them about curriculum changes.
- In-house training of teachers and introducing parts of the NEP in everyday teaching becomes the way to proceed.
- The growing dependence on tools of digitalization is democratizing liberal education for all.
- Overall, the pandemic has brought in a time of bonding and empathy to create chains of communication between parents, educators, and children.
